ASU brings 'new mind-set' to teaching global security

New online master's program in School of Politics and Global Studies offers prestige and accessibility to those in complex field.

"There's so much complexity to the understanding of global security; it brings into question everything from governmental structures to economics systems, as well as a host of social and cultural questions," said SPGS professor of practice Daniel Rothenberg.

ASU grad student co-directs Ghana study abroad program

ASU student Alicia Ellis's trip to Ghana this summer was two-pronged.

First, a co-director was needed to assist in leading an undergraduate study abroad program. Second, traveling to Ghana provided the political science graduate student an opportunity to meet sources and build a network as she began to look into case studies for her dissertation on the relationship between political economy of agriculture and democratic accountability.

Embracing a fuller Latino history for a brighter future

Young Latinos need to embrace the history that has been denied to them in order to fight for their civil rights, according to a panel discussion at the National Council of La Raza conference in Phoenix this summer.

The panel featured two ASU alumni including Daniel Ortega Jr., a Phoenix attorney who earned his bachelor's degree in political science from ASU in 1974.
